

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

I find myself grateful to the American Immigration Lawyers Association for their support of this publication. That includes the board of governors, Director Ben Johnson, and all those involved in publishing and marketing. Special thanks to Publishing Director Danielle Polen and my editors this year, Sarah Redzic and Richard Link. They are a true pleasure to work with, patient and kind, yet thorough editors. I've had the pleasure of working with Mary Johnson in Marketing for (is it possible?) this entire 20 years. Her fresh ideas, hard work, and positive attitude make the project fun and exciting. I also pause to acknowledge my previous, long-time editor and former Publishing Director Tatia Gordon-Troy, a creative and strong writer, now in private practice. Each edition builds on the previous book, and much of Immigration Consequences represents Tatia's efforts.

For many reasons, this book would not have been written without my associate attorney, Jennifer Vargas, and my invaluable assistant, Carla Barrientos. Jennifer updated most of chapter 13, as she is stronger at procedures and processes (bureaucracy) than I. She patiently checks my cites without ridicule. Both Jennifer and Carla spent hours editing and organizing the appendices. And they assuage clients when I am not immediately available because I'm sequestered in Northern Wisconsin or closeted at home writing and researching. Most important of all, they are upbeat and happy and keep me smiling and laughing as I work on this book.

I thank my family, José, José William, and Liz, for tolerating yet another season of missed beach days, dinners out, and other fun Miami activities because: sorry, I have to write. Life is good and I am blessed. Gracias familia.
